WASHINGTON, D.C. – The Alliance for Longevity Initiatives (A4LI) is proud to share that its Founder and CEO, Dylan V. Livingston, has been named to the Forbes 30 Under 30 Class of 2026. This national recognition highlights Dylan’s leadership in elevating longevity science as a priority in American public policy and advancing the movement to extend healthy human lifespan.

“I am deeply honored to be included on the Forbes 30 Under 30 list Class of 2026,” said Dylan V. Livingston. “To me, this recognition is less a reflection on me personally and more a reflection of the tremendous support the A4LI community has provided, and the fact that this field is rapidly becoming mainstream.”

A4LI continues to lead efforts that connect cutting-edge aging research with federal decision-making. This includes educating lawmakers on geroscience, supporting the development of new regulatory pathways for longevity therapeutics, and championing initiatives that promote equitable access to breakthrough aging-related technologies. Dylan’s recognition marks a milestone for both A4LI and the broader longevity community, signaling the growing importance of healthspan policy in shaping America’s scientific future.
