A4LI Announces Fourth Annual H-SPAN Summit D.C. with Georgetown University Center for Healthy Aging

November 17, 2026

WASHINGTON, D.C. – The Alliance for Longevity Initiatives (A4LI), in collaboration with the Center for Healthy Aging at Georgetown University, is hosting the 4th annual H-SPAN Summit D.C. from June 14–15, 2027. The two-day symposium will take place at the Georgetown University Capitol Campus, bringing together federal and state policymakers, researchers, and industry leaders around a unified goal: advancing America's healthspan and longevity science policy agenda.

"Each year, the H-SPAN Summit has grown into a stronger meeting point for the people building the future of healthy aging, and we are proud to return to Washington for a fourth year," said Dylan V. Livingston, Founder and CEO of A4LI. "The science of aging is moving faster than ever, and policy needs to keep pace. We are grateful to our colleagues at Georgetown University for their continued collaboration, and we look forward to hosting the longevity community in D.C. again this June."

The 2026 Summit convened researchers, biotech leaders, policymakers, investors, and advocates at Georgetown University, with speakers including officials from CMS, FDA, ARPA-H and members of Congress. Past summits have featured the first-ever Congressional briefings on longevity science and Hill Days with more than 70 scheduled meetings between attendees and their representatives.

"Healthy aging is a goal we can all agree on, but the research and the policy to get us there is incredibly complex," said Bill Rebeck, Professor of Neuroscience and Director of the Georgetown Center for Healthy Aging. "Collaborative engagement between researchers, institutions, and public stakeholders is essential. The H-SPAN Summit fosters that collaboration by convening experts to identify scientific bottlenecks and explore shared solutions."

Registration details, sponsorship opportunities, and the full program will be released in the coming months. More information will be available at a4li.org/h-span-summit-dc.
